GENTLEMEN: I am very much henored by the highly complimentary call which you have made upon me to lecture before the people of New York, and in gratefully complying with your wishes, I am far from insensible of the danger which it involves to myself, in being passed upon by so intelligent and critical a tribunal. My hesitation lessens, however, when I reflect that you invite me to speak of my native region; in respect to which, I trust, I ball be able to disabuse the public of the North of many mistaken impressions which do us wrong. You will, I doubt not, be pleased if I shall succeed in this, since it is always grateful to the just and magnammous nature to witness the official and the standard of the Smith. Three lectures, which is somewhat Idylic, and undertakes a birds-eye view of the scenery and habits of the Smith. Three lectures of this course will be delivered, the choice depending upon yourselves.

DINSMORE'S AMERICAN PUBLISHED THIS DAY, MAGDALEN HEPBURN, A NOVEL, By the author of "Zaidee." Price, $1. RAILROAD GUIDE

The writings of this accomplished lady have already won popularity in this country. The period to which it relates, the Scottish Reformation, is extremely rich in thrilling incidents which the author has woven into a book in the most natural and life-like manner. The londest landations of the press have been Leaped upon it. We append a few of the opinions:
"As a literary work, it is of sterling merit; the language always chaste, strong and scholarly. The best critics give this book the seal of their approbation." [Boston Transcript, "This is a story of Scottish history and romance, spirited, maginative, full of charming simplicity and good sense, and of a healthy, cheerful tone. Those who have real the farmer works by the same author, "Zaidee," will read this with much "The reader will find in this work very much to interest him

DINSMORE VERSUS THE APPLETONS. A plain statement of facts.

The right of any or every man to embark in the same business or profession as his neighbor, is a positive right. Whether the success of another has prompted the action of the next adventurer, or whatever the motive, it would not be politic to inquire. But when, to commence operations, the new comer finds it necessary to rob the store of his neighbor before he can stock his own, then a wrong is done, and the honesty of disheresty of such procedure becomes a lestimate matter for disherent or the form another that which either fortune or labor has endowed him with is stealing, and every one, however high his social or business position, is amenable for such an offense.

we do not complain that another has thought proper to follow in our steps. We would even give way to a successor whose wares were of better shape, substance and finish than our own, and yield the field to superiority. But how stands the case between the APPLETONS and ourselves? A few words will explain the whole states of the two parties.

For the past seven years we have been legitimately engaged in the publication of a work entitled the "AMERICAN RAIL WAY GUIDE," and during all that time have labored stremuonely and unreasingly to make it complete and acceptable to travelers. Success in our endeavors, if not as universal as we may have aspired to, has, nevertheless, been stand. We dust up a book which has given general satisfaction, and which has been educated. This book we claimed as our own personal which has been constantly enlarging, in proportion to the expansion of our system of raireads. This book we claimed as our own persons property, and thought that at least we had a right to its contraction of the contractio by the Applicators, of Broadway, and its No. I appeared on the last of July last.

Curiosity, interest, or one or other imotive, compelled us to examine the pages of a work which had been previously heralded with great industry unit—beiness test! It was to overshadow all previous and pre-conceived ideas of a Bailroad Guide—it was to antihilate our own unpretending voiume, and throw a calcium light over the path of the traveler. But oh! what a disappointment to ourselves—what a disance there was between profits and performance! Yes, grafte reader, we nere surprised—satounded; for what did we find it to contain but very scenario copies of our own tabular forms—copies so accurate, indeed, that even our very clerical errors were there, and oven figures which had been shaken out of the terms of this redoubtable

Now, if a man build a house, is it not his own! A man building a book, has he not a like right to its possession and enjoyent! If so, and if books are in reality property, then we have ten most outrageously robbed. The labor of years has been propried by another, and were the means of the other as werful as his will, we might infer that our end is nigh at mod. What readers of this Jereniad, is the due of such an tion! The law might avail us, but we appeal not to its unrainties—we simply leave the culprit to the moral judgment that the public.

action? The law might avail us, but we appeal not to its uncertainties—we simply leave the culprit to the moral judgment of the public.

But the tarpitude of the crime committed against us by this appropriation of our property, has some further phases. It is well known that we for many mouths had been sugged in the preparation of a larger work than that to which allusion has been made heretofore. We publish this our reserrint against vabbery in No. 3 of the work to which we refer. The first issue was made our the 1st day of Septemper. The Appletons' No. 3 is was issued on the same day. On comparison of the two works it was at once seen that our own contained nearly half a hundred tables, representing 1,500 miles of rairroad, more than the Appletons' Gwide. It was contained about five times as many steamboat routes as the Appletons' Gwide. In fact, we were fully satisfied that our book was reputable, and would pass public examination without much difficulty.

Another meeth rolled on, and the two Guides again made their periodical appearance—our Guide with a large amount of additional information, and many changes in the Time-Tables since the first issue, and—the Appletons' Guide with copies or abstracts of the half hundred tables which we alone had periously published, and with its steamboat routes doubled. Here was another flagrant appropriation of our industry and labor to the aggrancizement of our would-be rival. But of one thing we are certain, that the Time-Tables given for October in the Appletons' Guide with row one of the exactly one month behind our own in information—writher more nor tess. The public will padge of this matter.

is formation—neither more nor free. The public will judge of this matter. That this wholesale appropriation will be continued so buy as the Appletone's caused as published, we have not a shadow of doubt. We shall, however, take no interest in the matter to preventit; but shall rest satisfied that the traveler will soon discover which is the real Guide—the Guide that is always a month shead of its coremporary in all that is of value to the wayfarer, or the other. That our efforts to give a truthful and reliable work have stready been appreciated, we have supple tes-tingory. Our future efforts will challenge a continued and like appreciation from a discert mp public. Excelsion:

WHALING AND FISHING. By Charles Nordinoff, author of "Man-of-War Life," "The Merchant Vessel," &c. I vol., 12mo., 263 pages, Hustraft d. 75c.

"Since Data's "Two Years Before the Mast," we do not call to mind any more admirable descriptions of a sailor's life at sea than are contained in these graphic volumes. Herman Melville's rautical marratives are more highly spiced with piquant descriptive scenes, it is true, but for quiet, absorbing and as far as a lyndama can judge, faithful seconts of life on shipboard, commend us to this author. He somewhat resembles Capt. Basil Hall in his lively pictures of the routine of sea-service, but it is not so rambing nor so dippent as that calchrated told sait."

"The best and truest descriptions of seamen and of a sman's life ever given to the public, and the reader is only left to wonder why one who can write so remarkably well had ever anything to do with the rigging.

"I ledescribes the various countries which he visited, so far only, be it remembered, as they fell under his own observation—and this careful restriction and regard to the truth forms one of the principal charms of the works."

These works are reprinted in London and are highly praised by the Atherneum and other periodicals.
